*Original text: "The pride of the Suckers..." The term "Sucker" to denote someone from Illinois had its origins in the 1820s. Illinois men who traveled up the Mississippi in the spring, worked the Galena lead mines during warm weather, then migrated south when the cold weather came, were called after a type of river fish that had similar habits. The name had no connotation of gullibility and for a time was in common use, like "Hoosier" to indicate someone from Indiana.
